25 CASE NO. C11-1464-JCC

26 ORDER DROPPING PLAINTIFF
LIBERTY MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY AS

27 This matter comes before the Court on Plaintiff Liberty Mutual Fire Insurance 28 Company's response to the Court's second order to show cause. For the foregoing reasons, the 29 Court hereby DROPS Liberty Mutual as a party to this case.

30 Liberty Mutual's filings in this case, from the beginning, are an example of what not to 31 do when trying to get one's case heard in federal court. Rule 8(a)(1) of the Federal Rules of Civil 32 Procedure requires a pleading to contain "a short and plain statement of the grounds for the

1 court's jurisdiction." At the time Liberty Mutual filed its complaint, Ninth Circuit law clearly 2 established that "the insured, and only the insured, [has the substantive right] to sue for tort
 3 damages in subrogation actions [under Washington law]." Allstate Ins. Co. v. Hughes, 358 F.3d 4 1089, 1094 (9th Cir. 2004). Despite this legal backdrop, Liberty Mutual filed what appeared to 5 be a classic subrogation action in its own name, alleging diversity jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C.
 6 § 1332, without explaining why its non-diverse insureds (which Liberty Mutual, and thus the 7 Court, refers to as "Clise") were not the real parties in interest—i.e., without providing a "a short 8 and plain statement of the grounds for the court's [diversity] jurisdiction." Nowhere in its 9 complaint did it allege that Clise had assigned to Liberty Mutual its right to sue McKinstry.
 10 Nowhere in its complaint did it put this Court on notice that it was not pursuing a classic 11 subrogation action. Perhaps it hoped the Court wouldn't notice.

12       The Court noticed. Only after the Court issued an order to show cause did Liberty Mutual 13 bother to inform the Court that Clise had assigned to Liberty Mutual its right to sue McKinstry, 14 thus distinguishing this case from a classic subrogation action. However, nowhere in its response
 15 did Liberty Mutual inform the Court that it had not reimbursed Clise for the entire loss Clise
 16 suffered as a result of the water leak at issue in this case. Perhaps it again hoped the Court 17 wouldn't notice.

18       This time, Defendant noticed. McKinstry—not Liberty Mutual—brought the deductible
 19 clause of the insurance policy to the Court's attention. At that point, it became clear that Liberty 20 Mutual had also failed to comply with Rule 17(a)(1) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.
 21 That rule requires that "[a]n action [] be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest."
 22 Both Liberty Mutual and Clise are, unmistakably, real parties in interest to this lawsuit: The 23 complaint asks for damages sustained by Liberty Mutual "and/or its insured"—i.e., for the full 24 loss, not just the amount Liberty Mutual reimbursed Clise. Yet Liberty Mutual never named 25 Clise as a plaintiff. Liberty Mutual's reason for flouting Rule 17(a)(1) is clear: Naming Clise as a 26 plaintiff would have destroyed this Court's jurisdiction. Perhaps it again hoped the Court

1 wouldn't notice.

2 The Court noticed. Liberty Mutual now asks for the Court's leave to amend its complaint
3 to clarify that it is seeking only $5,279,915.66—and not also, on Clise's behalf, the $25,000 loss
4 that Clise suffered.

5 Too little, too late. The Court will not tolerate these games. Insurance companies are 6 sophisticated parties, with sophisticated lawyers at their disposal, who know the difference
7 between subrogation and assignment and are familiar with the real-party-in-interest rule. They 8 may not knowingly file a jurisdictionally-lacking complaint, close their eyes, hope for the best,
9 and suffer no consequences once the jurisdictional defect surfaces.

10 Even if this Court were to grant Liberty Mutual's motion for leave to amend its 11 complaint, it would find jurisdiction lacking on the basis that Clise is an indispensable party to 12 Liberty Mutual's lawsuit that destroys the Court's diversity jurisdiction. See Fed. R. Civ. P.
13 19(b). Liberty Mutual assures the Court that Clise has no intention of ever filing a claim against 14 McKinstry, and so McKinstry will not be prejudiced by proceeding only against Liberty Mutual.
15 The Court has no doubt that Liberty Mutual is willing to say anything—and get Clise to say 16 anything—to keep this case on schedule in federal court. But Clise's promises are not enough to 17 convince the Court of its indispensability. If the Court were to grant Liberty Mutual leave to 18 amend its complaint so as to demand only its $5,279,915.66 loss, the Court would render it a 19 certainty that Clise would never receive compensation for the $25,000 loss it allegedly suffered 20 as a result of the leak. The Court can avoid that prejudice to Clise only by dropping Liberty 21 Mutual from this lawsuit and allowing it to file its original complaint—for the entire loss, on 22 behalf of itself and Clise—in state court. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 19(b)(1) (court should consider “the 23 extent to which a judgment rendered in the person's absence might prejudice that person” in 24 determining “whether, in equity and good conscience, the action should proceed among the

1 existing parties or should be dismissed").<sup>1</sup> Moreover, Liberty Mutual has an entirely "adequate 2 remedy if the action [is] dismissed for nonjoinder," Fed. R. Civ. P. 19(b)(4): It can file its 3 complaint in state court. These factors weigh in favor of a determination that Clise is an 4 indispensable party to Liberty Mutual's lawsuit, and the Court so finds. See, e.g., Axis Ins. Co. v.
 5 Hall, --- F.R.D. ----, 2012 WL 5879136, at *4–9 (D. Me. 2012) (holding that partially-6 reimbursed, non-diverse insured was indispensable party, and dismissing for lack of diversity
 7 jurisdiction); Universal Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Tony DePaul & Sons, Inc., No. 01–0631, 2001
 8 WL 1175146, at *2–3 (E.D. Pa. Jul. 25, 2001) (same); Travelers Indem. Co. v. Westinghouse
 9 Elec. Co., 429 F.2d 77, 79–80 (5th Cir. 1970); Reliance Ins. Co. v. Wis. Natural Gas Co., 60
 10 F.R.D. 429, 431–32 (E.D. Wis. 1973); Potomac Elec. Power Co. v. Babcock & Wilcox Co., 54
 11 F.R.D. 486, 490–93 (D. Md. 1972).

12       Although Clise is an indispensable party to Liberty Mutual's lawsuit, Liberty Mutual is 13 not an indispensable party to the remaining Plaintiffs' lawsuit. Thus, the Court DROPS Liberty 14 Mutual as a party. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 21. The remaining Plaintiffs have advised the Court that 15 they have settled their claims against McKinstry. The Court thus respectfully DIRECTS the 16 Clerk to TERMINATE McKinstry's motion for summary judgment (Dkt. No. 23), Plaintiffs'
 17 motion to exclude McKinstry's expert (Dkt. No. 38), Plaintiffs' motion for partial summary 18 judgment (Dkt. No. 58), and McKinstry's motion to strike Plaintiffs' reply (Dkt. No. 81), and to 19 VACATE the trial of this matter scheduled for March 18, 2013. The Court ORDERS the 20 remaining parties, within thirty days, to file either a notice of settlement and stipulation of

 22       <sup>1</sup> Indeed, Washington regulators appear to have been concerned with exactly this kind of 23 prejudice to insureds when they promulgated Washington Administrative Code § 284-30-393, 24 which provides that "[t]he insurer must include the insured's deductible, if any, in its subrogation 25 demands." If an insurer could avoid its § 284-30-393 obligation by calling a subrogation an 26 assignment, and thereafter pursuing an action for recovery only of the amount it reimbursed its insured, that regulation would be rendered toothless. There is thus at least reason to doubt whether Liberty Mutual can amend its complaint to drop its demand for Clise's deductible (and if it cannot, then Clise is a real party in interest to this action that destroys this Court's diversity jurisdiction). The Court need not reach this issue given its finding of Clise's indispensability.

1 dismissal, or a joint status report explaining their failure to do so. See Fed. R. Civ. P.
2 41(a)(1)(A)(ii).
